COMPANY PROFILE

ABOUT US

Fission Uranium's history can be traced directly to Strathmore Minerals Corp., a firm founded in 1996 by Dev Randhawa. [4] Under his leadership, Strathmore Minerals spun out Fission Energy Corp in 2008,[5] and time Randhawa left Strathmore to run Fission Energy. Ross McElroy joined Fission Energy and led the company's technical team to its first major discovery: the J Zone at Waterbury Lake in Saskatchewan's Athabasca Basin.

A second discovery, at PLS in the Athabasca Basin, was made in November 2012. In 2013, Fission Uranium Corp. was spun out of Fission Energy b after a deal was made with Denison Mines Corp to acquire all assets except PLS.[6] In January, 2015, Fission Uranium announced a major resource estimate in the indicated and inferred categories which, at that time, was the largest undeveloped resource in the Athabasca Basin region.

THE PLS PROJECT

The PLS project is Fission's core asset and is host to the Triple R deposit, the undeveloped uranium deposit in Canada's Athabasca Basin District.[12] The property consists of around 17 contiguous claims totaling over 30,000 hectares located approximately 550 kilometers north-northwest of the city of Prince Albert and 150 kilometers north of the community of La Loche.

The PLS Property is located within the Mid-Boreal Upland Ecoregion of the Boreal Shield Ecozone.[13] In December 2016 the company announced it would conduct a 10,000 metre drill program to test regional targets outside of the Triple R Deposit.
